Prachuap Khirikhan province is known not only for its popular seaside resort town of Hua Hin, but within a landscape spanning over 230,000 acres of mountains, jungle, plains and seacoast, it is rich, fertile, and serves as a home to Thailand’s rare wildlife. Serving as a watershed area, the Kui Buri National Forest Reserve is located within the province, and is becoming better known for its recent success in increasing the number of wild elephants in a protected environment. With seven or eight new baby elephants born every year, the newcomers gradually add to the already existing 200-250 wild elephants born and bred in the area.

Our elephant safari start from one and a half hour driving to Kui Buri National Then we continue inner into the park to observe the wild elephants as they eat and play in the natural pond at the forest park. We may get to see many other wildlife in this nature reserve.
